for some other Senator than myself to have offered this resolution, but I have no desire to have called down upon the unoffending head of other Senators upon this floor the visls of wrath of a corrupt ring and their penny whistle newspaper. I have resolved to forego all feelings of delicacy and assume all the responsibilities and all the attending consequences. Sir, for two years I have borne the matter I have now presented before this Senate, and while I will say, Mr. President and Senators, I have always held that official acts of apublic servant were legitimate matters of criticism and discussion; that an honest difference of opinion was one of the high prerogatives of an American citizen, and that I have always entertained feelings of profound respect for the man differing with me in opinion. I have even entertained a kind of admiration for the manly adversary who would challenge me to a contest; but, sir, for the hired assassin who, from behind the shadow of your own doorway, would stab you in the back, I have always entertained leeilings of the most superiative contempt. The bold, manly solder who meets you in honest warfare upon the battle field, I respect, but not the coward who will poson the spring at which his enemy may drink. As I have already indicated, I ask no kind of immunity from a just criticism of the press of this or any other city, but I do most earnessly protest against these viper stings from under the cover of the proceedings of the Senate. cover of the proceedings of the Senate. My attention was drawn to this matter no over of the proceedings of the Senate.

My attention was drawn to this matter not only by Senators upon this floor, but friends throughout my whole Senatorial district. Do not imagine for a moment this is a matter of my own discovery, for I will say I have not sufficient confidence in the powers and virtues of disinfectants to touch that contaminated journal with a pair of tongs. Mr. President, with the editor of that paper I have never had an unfriendly word. I might properly ask the reason why; but would you ask the eringing sycophant, the subscribent hinges of the knee that thrift may follow fawning?" Would you ask him for a reason why? Would you ask the proprietor of a journal who places his favors upon the market as the prostitute does her charms to be sold to whoever will buy them, for a reason why? In the first place I may not be able to, and in the second place I do not choose to pay the price. It may be very possible that my humble movements in this body may not be worthy of notice in that paper. Sir, whilst my lips may not have been touched by the coal from the alars of insuired elebe worthy of notice in that paper. Sir, whilst my lips may not have been touched by the coal from the altar of inspired eloquence, or the mantle of genius may never have fallen upon my shoulders; whilst my very humble pretensions may not have been thought worthy of the distinguished consideration of other Senators, upon this floor, yet I do hope I still retain enough of the elements of a man to ask at the hands of my assohope I still retain enough of the elements of a man to ask at the hands of my associates even and open handed justice. I have offered this resolution because it contains all the elements of truth. It is immaterial to me what its fate may be, but this I desire to say, to all those who desire to engage in such warfare, as the sailor says when he drops his marling spike from the mast head, "Stand from under!"

Under the rules the resolution lies over for one day.
